Croeso! Rhagarweiniad ...

Croeso i Cymraeg yn y cartref.

The aim of Welsh in the Home is to provide you with additional phrases and vocabulary so that you can use more Welsh at home and support your child or children through bilingual education.

As well as useful Welsh phrases and vocabulary, you will learn a little about contemporary Welsh culture and traditions you can enjoy with your children, and pick up tips to help you develop your Welsh language skills in the home.

These children will help you understand which age groups are suited to activities and services mentioned in this course.

Singing Welsh songs is a great way for you and your child to learn new words and have fun! You'll find lots of great videos of Welsh nursery rhymes online, such as this playlist prepared by Newport City Council featuring songs that your child will learn at their Cylch Meithrin or school: <https://www.youtube.com/user/newportwebteam/playlists> Many music streaming services have Welsh playlists for children and your local Welsh bookshop can help you find CDs and DVDs to play at home.

Ti a Chi

With your child, you should use the singular and informal Ti. Some children use chi with a parent as a sign of respect, but it's more common now for children to call a parent ti. Chi is used when talking to more than one person, so you should use it if you have more than one child, when speaking to both or all of them.
